I'm in a quandary as to why the "1,000 feet free line" policy, which has been in effect for the past 54 years, has been repealed by the Commission.

Businesses and people, who reside in the rural and outlying counties in Arizona, are being extremely hurt by the repeal of the free extension of 1,000 feet of electrical lines. As you are aware, APS is a monopoly and, therefore, there are no means for these communities to obtain a competitive bid.

Every business has a cost of doing business. This should also be a requirement for APS. These communities pay for their electrical services and APS should be willing to assist them by reinstating the free 1,000 feet of electrical line service.

These rural and outlying communities are a partner in our economy and represent a quality of life we all enjoy. They pay for their growth with impact fees, building permits and taxes and provide a huge benefit to the State of Arizona.

I urge you to repeal this policy and return to the 1,000 free feet line.

Thank you for your expedient attention to this matter.
